Putting Your Dog's Health First

Vets are wonderful people – when your dog is ill, they do their best to return your friend to health. Vets are specialists in diagnosis, drugs and surgery. In other words, they have been trained to fix problems once they arise.

Top breeders, behaviourists, trainers, show people, and long-time pet owners – people who really love dogs and want the best for their friends – seek to stop health problems arising.

Their experiences, over many years, have led them to believe that what you feed a dog, and how you deal with preventative healthcare, can reduce the chances of dogs getting ill in the first place. These experienced people don't spend thousands of pounds at the vet's trying to help sickly dogs. Instead, they give their dogs the food they need to promote health, and they don't give unnecessary and harmful medications in an attempt to fix basic errors of care.

Canine Health Concern was formed in 1994, when people at the centre of the dog world started asking why so many dogs were suffering from skin problems, epilepsy, arthritis, allergies, and more serious diseases like cancer and leukaemia.

It is a miserable experience to watch an animal you love, who relies upon you totally, suffering while you stand helplessly by. But it is a wonderful, joyous, experience to see your dogs brimming with health and vitality. Over the last decade and more, we have amassed significant and compelling information about the causes of health and ill health in dogs, and we have put it into practice. The results speak for themselves.

By changing what we feed our dogs, and making informed choices about preventative healthcare options, we are walking the talk. We have healthy, vibrant, long-lived dogs. Canine Health Concern would like to share this information with you – because we care about all dogs, and not just our own.

By becoming a member of Canine Health Concern, you can acquire years of experience amassed by dog lovers in the know.

By joining Canine Health Concern, you will:

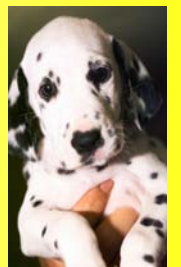

- Receive regular information about canine nutrition that will put a new lease of life into your dog, and potentially save you a fortune in vet bills.
- Learn the truth about annual vaccination so you can keep your dogs healthy, and save even more money.
- Learn about a wide range of complementary therapies that can fix problems without resorting to drugs with potentially harmful side-effects (we also share information about these drugs, so you can be empowered to make knowledgeable choices).
- Gain knowledge from which to make informed decisions on behalf of your dogs.

Annual subscription is £16.00. In return, you will receive quarterly newsletters, interim email bulletins, be invited to join our internet support group, and receive regular updates about our Foundation in Canine Healthcare educational programme. We are also always working on ways to give members access to resources, healthcare and other products at discounted prices. Most importantly, we will help you to keep your dog healthy, and save you money on unnecessary vet bills.
